Poor Walter! He must have felt the blood trickle from his side before the wound was received. A week before the election, the gallant Repubor two on his Himois farm aceding Hean candidate for Governor put in his little petition to Mars Rutherford for the vacancy in the Federal District Court, occasioned by the death of Judge Ballard.

If Mr. Evans gets the appointment of Federal Judge, in place of Bland Ballard, deceased, the worry and expense incurred in the late State canvass should be forgotten. Five thousand dollars a year for life is calculated to make almost any man forgetful For that amount the average man could absolutely be induced to become absent-minded.

The town of Clarksville, Tenn., is just now enjoying an overdose of quarantine. A writer in the Tobacco Leaf sums up the expense of the late quarantine ordinance to be $235 per day, $7,050 per month; so that if the fever continues until September 25th, the outlay by the city will be $21,150 to carry out the ordinance.

He followed in the reflected light of the demon's eye, and after ascending two or three flights of broken stairway, according to instructions of that object which beckoned him, saying "follow me," there was a halt. The object neared him, took him by the sleeve and said, "descend now this ladder with me." He did. They went down, down, down. They reached the bottom, It was, figuratively speaking, a bottomless pit. There hung a bag, about the size of a flour barrel. These remarks

Just then came a howl, an unearth, y yell, from Frank. "Look a-here George, I'll give you fair warning, if you souze that devilish bone finger o yours in my side again, I'll kick your plum off'n this blanket."

George had been dreaming and was sad to know that there was no "realty a ratio of less than one death to three in dreams."
